“I believe in photography’s potential as a transforming agent of society.

“A photogram is a technique of image production that involves placing objects on light sensitive paper and exposing them to light.

“This series of photograms was made from leaves collected from the Cerrado, a vast tropical biome (a large ecological area on the earth’s surface) composed of savannas and grasslands amid humid and dry forests. The Cerrado is located in the highlands of central Brazil and covers about 21 percent of the Brazilian territory. The Cerrado is a hotspot of biodiversity because of the high number of organisms there that are not found anywhere else on earth.”
